Introduction

Hey. I'm Lukas.

I've learned that most advice out there is garbage for upskilling and landing remote jobs.

So, in this cheatsheet, I will provide you with some of my top resources for landing a remote job.

This guide provides the truth about what works, what doesn't, and how to get started today, even if you have no prior experience.

How To Land a Remote Job

PICKING A PATH THAT ACTUALLY WORKS

Before anything else, we need to set one thing straight. There are remote jobs out there that don't require a degree or experience.

That's not to say that it's as simple as pressing apply and landing the job. You'll still need to go through the steps mentioned below. But unless you want to become a lawyer, engineer, etc, there are other ways to become job-ready.

Job success isn't random. It's about alignment: picking a role where you can compete and thrive.

If you are starting from scratch, your career path must be:

1. Beginner-friendly. No degree or past experience required.
2. Remote-compatible. Designed for online work.
3. Financially viable . It pays enough.

I've separated it into 5 beginner-friendly paths I recommend. These are all remote work-friendly and have jobs that don't require a degree or experience. This is NOT an exhaustive list. There are many, many more options.

1. Data Analytics
2. Digital Marketing
3. Customer Support / Customer Success
4. Admin / Operations

5. Remote Sales

GET QUALIFIED

Forget "experience." Forget degrees.

Modern employers (for the roles we mentioned) want to see:

- Skills
- Proof (via projects, portfolios, or certifications)

Best Platforms For Affordable Online Learning:

- Coursera (Google, Meta, IBM)
- edX (Harvard, MIT)
- Udacity (tech-heavy)
- Google Certificates (fast + job-focused)
- CourseCareers (our partner but they actually have top rated career programs)

How to choose the right path:

- Choose a general course and then niche down and learn the most valuable skills in depth. Extract the core skills from actual job listings, by simply going through 10-15 of them and seeing what skills appear frequently.
- BUT do not just take random courses. I've made the mistake of "certificate collecting." You must choose courses and things directly aligned with your chosen career path to bring you forward.
- The goal isn't to impress employers with long lists of courses. That means very little. It's to prove you are capable and committed.

The Job Market

There are two ways you can go here. Most people send hundreds, if not thousands, of applications and play a guessing game.

That can work, but it's incredibly inefficient. You're literally gambling with your future, and a career casino is no good place to be.

The right way is to focus on quality over quantity. When you know exactly what to look for, it's much less about throwing out a net and hoping to catch the right fish.

Instead, it's like picking a certain bait and using a fishing rod to catch the fish you're looking for.

You don't want to go with the spray-and-pray method, which is becoming increasingly popular. You want to hit the bullseye right away.

This not only applies to finding the right jobs but also to how you send your applications and how you position yourself as a candidate. This removes the luck aspect of job applications and makes them entirely based on one's efforts and strategy

MINDSET IS EVERYTHING

Mindset shifts that matter just as much as strategy:

- You're not late. You don't need to be perfect, you need to be consistent. Rejection isn't failure. You don't need to feel ready. you need to start anyway.

Most people never succeed because they:

- Watch trainings but never act

- Start and stop every 2 weeks.
- Let self-doubt lead every decision
